Jerusalem and the Abrahamic Faiths throughout the Ages

By Prof. Moshe Ma'oz

Course Venue: Committee Hall (Room No. 128), SIS II, JNU

Date: 9-17 November 2016

Time: 4:00-7:00 PM

Overview

The aim of the course is to outline and examine in a scholarly, impartial way the long, complex relations among Muslims, Christians and Jews in various periods and areas with a special attention to the question of Jerusalem. Religiously and culturally the old city of Jerusalem and its Temple Mount have been sacred to Jews, Christians and Muslims for centuries. Under Muslim rule the Jewish and Christian minorities in Jerusalem were allowed for long periods to pray at the religious shrines, but not on the Temple Mount. In contrast, under the Byzantine rule (324-638) Jews were not permitted to reside in Jerusalem; and during the Crusades (1099-1187) most Jews and Muslims were forcibly evicted from Jerusalem. Otherwise Muslim attitudes to Jews and Christians in Jerusalem and elsewhere were ambivalent: rejection and antagonism, tolerance and cooperation, depending on various circumstances and differing from period to period. However, with the emergence of the Jewish and Arab nationalist movements in the late 19th century, Jerusalem has gradually took the centre stage and become a site of nationalist political dispute aggravated by the religious and cultural differences, with the Christian Arabs siding with Muslims against Jews. Following Israel's occupation of East Jerusalem and the Temple Mount in the June 1967 War the Muslim-Jewish and Arab-Israel conflict has further exacerbated, leading to growing Muslim Judeophobia and the emergence of Jewish Islamophobia. Christians have remained divided on this issue.
